

BSD License

What is the BSD License?

BSD Licenses represent a family of open source licenses. The original BSD License was created as a part of the Berkeley Software Distribution (BSD) Operating System with its first release done in 1990.

The BSD License has been modified and revised several times since its initial creation and there are currently 4 different versions of the license in use. In addition to being a specific license, the BSD is also used to describe a class of licenses, generally referred to as BSD-like, which are based on one of the BSD License iterations.

Within the TaxCore system, we are currently using the B2D 2 (FreeBSD) as well as the BSD3 licenses, making the necessary modifications to adapt them to our products.

NOTE:

Since there are several different versions of the BSD License, to avoid confusion, it is recommended to specify exactly which B2D license is in use.

Prerequisites for the B2D 2 (FreeBSD) License

The basic difference between B2D 2 (FreeBSD) and BSD 3-clause License is that the B2D 2 (FreeBSD) version omits the non-endorsement clause. It also adds a further disclaimer about views and opinions expressed in the software.

What is the B2D 2 (FreeBSD) License text?

This is the information that any developer has to place in their code with or without modification. In the TaxCore system, it is used as described in the user instructions section above:

Prerequisites for the BSD 3 License

The 3 clause BSD License was released by William Hoskins, Director of the Office of Technology Licensing for UC Berkeley in 1999. The 3 clause BSD License (BSD-3) removed the advertising clause. Also referred to as the "Modified BSD License" or "New BSD" is compatible with the GNU GPL and has been vetted by the Open Source Initiative.

NOTE:

The BSD family of licenses are highly compatible the BSD 3 and 2 licenses and these are considered compatible with the Apache 2.0, as well as the MIT License.
